Google no up to par on diversity

By MARTHA MENDOZA

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Google has had more trouble diversifying its workforce than its computer scientists have had setting projects that respond to search requests in the blink of an eye or recognizing human faces without a human behind the wheel.

That seemed to be the takeaway when the Silicon Valley giant issued a report on its ethnic breakdown for the workforce this week that showed that 61% of all employees identified themselves as white and only one-third of them were black and Hispanic in make up about 38% of the workforce.

Google is miles from where we want to be said Lord Lamb, head of personnel at Google.

He said the biggest factor in the diversity disparity is a shortage of students majoring in computer science or other technical fields in college.

“There is an absolute pipeline problem,” he said in an interview Wednesday with PBS NewsHour.

Google said that in one year there were just two black people with new doctorates in computer science for every 2,000 people in the U.S. and that the number of black doctorates does not even come close to the number needed to fill all of the open positions.

The choice might be to accept the lack of diversity as a technology conundrum.

Google has $10 billion in advertising revenue and more than 2,100 people in 33 countries, but the U.S. is at a disadvantage because the number of people in the U.S. is far lower than the number of people in other countries.

The company has 127, about triple the number of its competitors, and only 747, or nearly 700, are white, as well as the people in the “minimum classes” that have historically favored white people.

To address the issue, Google has more than 30,000 employees through 90-minute training sessions during the past year to help them become more aware of biases.

Deal reached in Clippers sale, insider says

By CHRISTOPHER SHERMAN

LOS ANGELES — An individual with knowledge of negotiations to sell the Los Angeles Clippers said Sterling has reached an agreement to sell the team to former Microsoft CEO Steve Ballmer for $2 billion.

The individual, who was not authorized to speak publicly, told The Associated Press on Thursday that Ballmer and the Sterling Family Trust have a binding agreement. The deal must be presented to the NBA.

The competition is part of the School of Journalism’s annual Cardboard Boat Festival, which is being held for the first time at the University of Texas at Austin. The festival is a testament to the creativity and ingenuity of the student competitors. The boat race is held on the Lady Bird Lake, near the downtown area of Austin, and attracts participants from across the state.

EGYPT: Lukewarm voter turnout at polls taints landslide victory

The popular hero didn’t find the masses marching to the ballot boxes to lift him to the palace. The shock is the state’s need to use its old tools to defend its nominae.

The firm is also trying to do more recruiting with colleges with large minority enrollments. During the past few years, Google has dispatched a specialist to work with minority-serving institutions to identify companies that would be interested in placing its interns, knowing that some are not as well known as others.

The firm is also considering extending its internship program to other minority-serving institutions, including historically black colleges and universities, with the goal of placing some of its interns at those campuses.

SALT LAKE CITY — A group of Utah high school students said they were upset and unable to pick up their yearbook photos because alterations were made to their portraits to make them look different from the way they appeared in class.

Three students at Wasatch High School in Heber, about 45 miles east of Salt Lake City, said they were disappointed to find that some portraits had been reprinted with sleeves and higher necklines to cover up bare skin.

Texas shields execution drug origin, maker

OMAR MEHRAJT

DALLAS — Texas prison system does not have to reveal where it gets its execution drugs, the attorney general said Thursday.

Attorney General Greg Abbott, the Republican candidate for governor, said he made the decision because state prisons might lose their drug suppliers if they revealed where they bought their execution drugs.

Texas prison officials told the Court of Criminal Appeals that they did not disclose the source of their execution drugs because to do so would put drug suppliers at risk. The court said Thursday that Abbott was correct.

Texas is among a group of states that maintain strict rules for their execution drugs that prevent those drugs from being sold to the public. Abbott said the court’s decision reflected that policy. He said the court was right that a Texasinne state official could be found guilty of selling execution drugs if state officials did not reveal the drug’s source.

A spokesman for the prison system said Thursday it would not seek to reveal the source of its execution drugs.

The court said Thursday that Abbott was correct.

The court upheld the previous decision of the 13th Court of Appeals in Houston, which had previously rejected the prisoners’ request. The court said Thursday that the supply of execution drugs is a matter of public interest.
